(b) A statment is enclosed.

Statement

The report of the Committee to Review the working of the Monetary System which was submitted to the Reserve Bank of India in May, 1985, has made a number of recommendations in regard to the monetary system.

The Committee is of the view that the objective of price stability should be pursued mainly through monetary policy in the short run. It has stressed the importance of close coordinations between monetary policy and fiscal policy. In this connection, it has inter alia recommended that a proper framework for the regulation of Reserve Bank credit to Government should be evolved by the R.B.I. and the Government with due regard to the impact of monetisation of debt. A revision of the yields on government securities and the rate of discount on Treasury Bills has been suggested ;n this context. In order that credit requirements of the productive sector are adequately met, the Committee has recommended that banks should "have greater freedom in determining their lending rates. It is also of the view that concessional interest rates as a redistribute device should be used in a very selective manner. The Committee has stressed the importance of providing bank credit in the f°rm of loam and bin finance instead of predominantly in the form cash credit as at present. As regard in terest rates on bank deposits, it is of the view that the latter should be positive after adjusting for inflation. '! has cautioned that the monetary policy-should n,ot be depjndenj excessively on any single or just a few instruments of monetary regulations and bas suggested that the Reserve Bank should take measures io develop an defficient money market.

The Reserve Bank of India will be taking necessary action in consultation with the Government in response to the recommendation made by the Committee.
